DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

- Department Project Advances Science of Mercury Capture in Low Rank Coal.
In cooperation with the National Energy Technology Laboratory, a project team led by Reaction Engineering International of Salt Lake City, Utah, has recently developed a preliminary rate equation for mercury oxidation across a selective catalytic reduction (SCR) unit. Since mercury from low rank coal is hard to capture, and oxidized mercury is easier to capture, these findings may enhance mercury capture from coals for units that include SCR. The finding has important implications for multi-pollutant control under the Clear Skies Initiative. Approximately one-third of all coal-fired power plants in the U.S. are expected to have SCR installed within the next five years.
- Department Selects Five NO_x Control Projects to Combat Acid Rain and Smog.
Five projects were recently selected from among 20 proposals submitted in response to a solicitation for technologies that will meet the stringent nitrogen oxide (NO_x) emissions targets of the Clear Skies Initiative and EPA's Clean Air Interstate Rule Title I (formerly the Interstate Air Quality Rule). Under the Office of Fossil Energy Pollution Control Innovations program, the Department will contribute $3 million of the $4.3 million total value of the projects. The technologies are suited to smaller, older facilities (66 percent of the domestic fleet) that are not easily retrofit with state-of-the-art selective catalytic reduction (SCR) units. It is estimated that the technologies to be developed in these projects could prevent an aggregate capital expenditure of $2 billion associated with SCR unit installations at such facilities.

- Department to Participate in Power India 2004.

On October 26, the Office of Fossil Energy will be delivering a presentation at the Power India 2004 conference in Mumbai, India on Indo-U.S. cooperation in coal and power. Based upon a November 2001 agreement between you and India Prime Minister Vajpayee, a bilateral “Coal Advisory Group” was created to identify areas for potential cooperation and make recommendations for the elimination of barriers to the efficient, economic, and environmentally acceptable use of coal for power generation. The presentation will be followed by a site visit to the Nagpur coal washery in Madhya Pradesh to determine the feasibility of using that site as a demonstration of power from the reprocessed coal.

This week, the U.S.-Canada Air Quality Report will be released jointly by EPA and Environment Canada (the Canadian equivalent of the U.S. EPA). The report is a routine update produced every two years to describe progress on emission reduction commitments, which highlights cooperation between the U.S. and Canada on trans-boundary air pollution issues, including acid rain and ozone. Release of the report is not expected to generate significant attention since most of the data has already been included in previously released reports.

This week, EPA will release the results of the National Survey on Environmental Management of Asthma and Children’s Exposure to Environmental Tobacco Smoke (ETS) as part of Children’s Health Month.
