With no suspense but the final vote count left in the Roberts contest, senators from both parties are focused on Bush's next nomination. Reid said Democrats will consider it "a sharp poke in the eye" if Bush taps any of the 10 appellate court nominees who were blocked -- permanently or temporarily -- by Democratic-led filibusters in Bush's first term. That would include Judges Priscilla R. Owen and Janice Rogers Brown, who have been mentioned as possible nominees.

Would he try another filibuster? a reporter asked. "I'm just saying I would be terribly upset," Reid replied.
