Pool report #2 _ May 21, 2001

Bush's return to Washington from Yale University.

Not much to report, but you might want critique of Bush's speech from Lanny Davis at bottom.

The motorcade from Yale to the New Haven airport was uneventful, with the only color coming from a couple of protesters. As the motorcade passed through a residential street near the airport, a man held a sign saying, "Hiel (sic) to the Thief. ? ? ? A woman next to him was yelling. I could not make out what she was saying, but it obviously wasn't the "Bush-Cheney" chant.

At the airport, Bush and Gov. John Rowland worked a short rope line for a couple of minutes before boarding Marine One for the trip to the Hartford airport. Rowland helped out by snapping a couple of photographs of Bush and the well-wishers, most of whom were military personnel.

The guests on Air Force One included former Clinton aide Lanny Davis and his wife and infant child.

Davis, who graduated from Yale a year ahead of Bush and was also a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon, Bush's frat, said he was hitching a ride back to Washington.

"He's an old friend of mine from Yale, and I decided to do him honors," Davis said. He said Bush's speech was "great. It was the right tone. It never surprises me that he can reach out to people even who disagree with him."

AF 1 landed at Dulles at about 2:26 p.m., and Bush returned to the White House by helicopter.
